President of Columbia Theological Seminary to Visit Trinity Coilege.

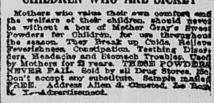

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Trinity College, Durham, N. C., April 2.—Rev. Thornton Whaling, president of the Columbia Theological Seminary, of Columbia, S. Old General Breart, of the French army, who has just been gathered to his fathers, was the military commander who added Turk to Turk t over the debating team of the South army, who has just been gathered to his fathers, was the military commander who added Tunis to France's colonial empire, and who forced the Bey Es Sadock to accept the protectorate and suzerainty of France. The general was rather brusque, and was, moreover, assisted in his task by a very queer mannerism, for which he was noted. He was afflicted with a sort of nervous movement which caused him to constantly jerk his head back when laboring under the slightest degree of excitement. To counteract this, he would constantly carry his hand to his throat.

When the general handed to the Bey the document accepting the protectorate of France over his dominions, and acknowledging himself a vassal of that power, the Bey hesitated for a few minutes about signing it, holding his pen in his hand. General Breart became quite excited. He did not say anything. But his head began jerking backwards, and he commenced carrying up his hand to his throat. The Bey, who was ignorant of this infirmity of the general, stared at him with a considerable amount of alarm, and then firmly continued to the series.

Trinity had the affirmative side of the question, and was represented by Quinton Holton, of Durham; H. M. Ratcliffe, of McFarlon, and J. R. Davis, of Shelby. South Carolina's speakers were A. P. DuBose, E. R. Jeter and J. R. Brandenburg. The judges were E. S. Dreher, superintendent of the city graded schools of Columbia; B. Hart Moses, of Orangeburg, and Associate Justice D. E. Hydrick, of three, the first having been held here last spring, when South Carolina. This was the second in the series of three, the first having been held held next year, when the winner will be declared the champlon, and will receive as a trophy a handsome silver loving cup, which has been offered to the winner of the series.
